8. MORALE:

During the entire period reported, the Division was engaged in combat, operating through the rugged and inaccessible terrain of the Appennines, following the breakthrough of the Gothic Line. With full consideration being given to all pertinent factors, morale may well be defined as being excellent. Operations were greatly hampered and the personal comfort of troops seriously diminished by a chilling rain which fell during the greater part of the period. With supply routes accessible only to mules and carrying parties troops in forward areas were wet and cold and limited to hard rations and water for a considerable period of time. Supply agencies finally managed to bring up dry clothing and hot, nourishing food and drink, which did much to maintain the aggressive spirit that has been so evident in all operations. Units relieved from the line are immediately furnished a change of clothing, bathing facilities were made available, post exchange rations were distributed and entertainment furnished by the Division band and the ARC Clubmobile. These facilities as well as passes to Florence, Italy for both officers and enlisted men quickly bolstered morale to a very high state. Poor mail service however continues to present a morale problem. The V type of mail seems to be arriving although in very limited quantities. As for the regular type first class mail however only one delivery was effected during the entire period. The Division Postal Officer reports that this condition is a result of limited surface transportation from the States and poor flying weather, and that official action has been taken through Postal channels to correct the situation.

9. CIVILIAN POPULATION:

Contacts between the civilians and the military were very few. All matters pertaining to the former are referred to the Civil Affairs Officer attached to this Headquarters. Movement of civilians is restricted within the Division zone, movement through and across Unit areas is controlled by lower Unit commanders. Check points are designated by the CIC detachment of the Division and manned by Military Police supplemented by Carabinieri. No disturbances or lack of cooperation has been evident.
